

Save July 9-12 for the North American Conference on Land Value Tax in Kansas City, Missouri

Property tax goes beyond taxing the advantages of the property's location and punishes the property owner for what he has done for himself. As a result, home owners and productive property owners are overtaxed and negligent speculation becomes profitable.

This year's conference will have dozens of sessions and expert speakers. Featured topics and speakers include:

Procedure vs. Politics in Real Estate Assessment: multiple expert panels featuring Ted Gwartney, chief assessor, Greenwich, Connecticut

The Legitimate Concerns of Right and Left: featuring Joe Bast, director of the Heartland Institute, Frank de Jong, leader of the Ontario Green Party and others

Public School Finance: featuring Steve Gardner - Public Policy Research Center, University of Missouri

The Great Realignment - Toward a non-interventionist progressivism: (banquet) Dan Sullivan, director of Saving Communities

Land Value Tax for Kansas City and St. Louis: Joe Haslag, Show Me Institute

Conference fees, hotel reservations and program updates will be posted at:

Land value tax falls only on the value of the location. It reduces the tax burden on most home owners and productive property owners, and reduces the profitability of idle speculation.
